THE COOPERATIVE DIFFERENCE

What IS a cooperative? They are not-for-profit, owned and governed by their members. They operate on the seven cooperative principles, which are: voluntary and open membership, democratic member control, members' economic participation, autonomy and independence, education, training and information, cooperation among cooperatives and concern for community.

The co-op known today as GreyStone Power began in 1936 when electric pioneers went door-to-door signing up members for a new concept, "the electric," which brought a new way of life that had only existed in their dreams.

Investor-owned utilities would not serve the sparsely populated west side of Atlanta; there were not enough profits for their stockholders. Taking matters into their own hands, in August 1936, a group of determined local people met in Douglasville. They formed the Farmers Electrical Association, applied for a Rural Electrification Administration loan and set out to build 83 miles of power lines. Today, after two name changes, the first to Douglas County Electric Membership Corporation and the second to GreyStone Power Corporation, the system serves more than 7,700 miles of line and more than 153,000 meters.

The United Nations General Assembly officially proclaimed 2025 as the International Year of Cooperatives (IYC). This puts a spotlight on the enduring global impact of cooperatives and the cooperative model, which is an essential solution to overcome many global challenges. Co-ops continue to meet the needs of their communities and bring essential services, such as broadband, to underserved areas.

Following the mission statement, GreyStone strives to make life better in the communities it serves. Happy International Year of Cooperatives!

How does GreyStone help grow the local economy? Patrice.

At GreyStone Power, our power isn't just ... power. It's our people. It's Patrice, working with community leaders on economic development. It's Jeff, doing home energy audits and giving efficiency tips. It's Rita, organizing STEM Day for hundreds of high school students. And it's members like you, enjoying some of the lowest rates in the nation. So here's to our people, and the pursuit of perfect power, right here in the community.
